Doyline man arrested, accused of cyberstalking

MICHELLE BATES michelle@press-herald.com

A man accused of cyberstalking has been arrested.

James Alvin Scarborough, 34, of the 300 block of Dogwood Drive in Doyline, was arrested on Saturday, June 6, and charged on a warrant for violations of provisions of the cyberstalking law. His bond was set at $1,500.

According to reports, Webster Parish Sheriff's deputies John Byrd and Daniel White arrested Scarborough at his place of employment. While the report does not go into detail about the alleged crime, Webster Parish sheriff's officials say the incident occurred between a father and his daughter's boyfriend over some belongings.

Cyberstalking is defined in the Louisiana criminal statutes as a form of stalking.

Passed by the Louisiana Legislature in 2010, the law defines cyberstalking in Louisiana Revised Statute 14:40.3 as follows: "Cyberstalking is action of

Lawmakers agree to veto-proof budget

MELINDA DESLATTE

BATON ROUGE - In a chaotic flurry of lastminute votes, Louisiana their work Thursday with a deal on next year's $24 billion budget that will keep public colleges and health services from deep cuts and that meets Gov. Bobby Jindal's criteria to escape a

The deal was struck and approved in the 60-day legislative session's final hours, with the House and Senate agreeing to Jindal's demand that they create a tax credit on paper to protect the Republican governor's anti-tax record as he readies his likely presidential campaign.

Support of the tax-credit maneuver, in a 30-9 Senate vote and a 59-43 House vote, ended one of the main sticking points in negotiations and paved the way for passage of the budget for the fiscal year that begins July 1 and the tax plans that will finance

Shortly after the session ended, Jindal declared victory for his last legislative session as governor, though lawmakers took their own approach on how to balance the budget, mocked the financing maneuvers required by the governor and rejected two of the main planks of his legislative agenda.

"From our perspective, it was a good session," the governor said.

After starting the session in April with a $1.6 billion budget gap and the threat of more than 80 percent state-financing cuts across college campuses, the final budget cobbled together avoided the dire scenarios.

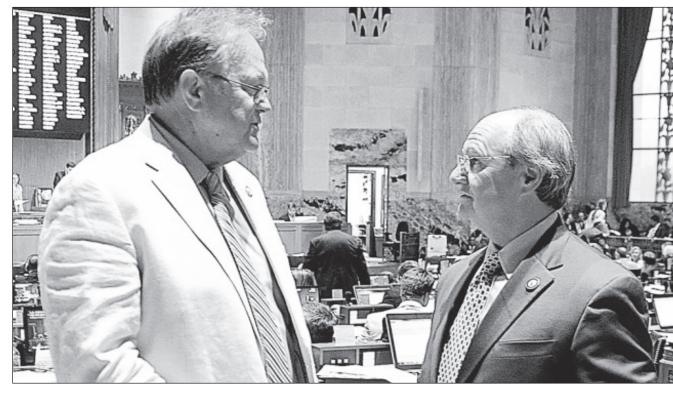

"This is probably one of the toughest legislative sessions that anybody in this building has faced in many, many years - in decades," House Speaker Chuck Kleckley, R-Lake Charles, told lawmakers. He added: "We have done incredible work.'

The problem was largely of their own making. Jindal and lawmakers balanced this year's budget with $1.2 billion in patchwork financing from property sales, legal settlements and other one-time sources of cash. The dollars weren't expected to reappear next year, creating most of the shortfall they struggled to Lawmakers agreed to raise taxes, shrink tax breaks and scale back business subsidies to drum up about $700 million for the budget. They added millions more with fee hikes on a wide array of services.

On the final day, the House and Senate resolved disputes on the tobacco tax, agreeing to a 50-cent tax hike that will boost the per-pack tax rate to 86 cents and to charge a new tax on electronic cigarettes and vapor products. The House also agreed to a Senate-approved $50 fee increase on car buyers to raise $60 million annually.

Expected to announce his presidential campaign in two weeks, Jindal threatened to veto $370 million in tax increases, unless lawmakers agreed to offset them with what he considers a tax cut. He has closely guarded his record on a no-tax pledge he signed with an organization led by national anti-tax activist Grover Norquist.

The close alliance with Norquist became a joke and a point of anger — for lawmakers throughout the legislative session. By the final days, at least one lawmaker carried a stuffed animal of Grover, the Muppet, around on the House

To satisfy Jindal's terms, lawmakers agreed to create a tax credit — called SAVE that doesn't raise new money or cut anyone's taxes, but can be used for Jindal to claim an offset against other tax hikes used to balance the budg-

Senators went along with the plan easily, but House members balked until Thursday, passing it less than two hours before the legislative session had

Rep. Chris Broadwater, R-Hammond, urged his colleagues to vote for the tax-credit maneuver, saying it would spare higher education from steep reductions. But even Broadwater said he was embarrassed about the legislation. "I will swallow my pride.

I will choose to be embarrassed knowing that I stood and fought for higher education to the very end," he said.

Critics called the SAVE tax credit a deception to the public, designed solely to benefit the governor's White House ambitions.

This scheme doesn't raise a single red penny to what's available to higher education, not one. It is a pure fiction. It is contrived. Ît is a gimmick," said Rep. John Bel Edwards, leader of the House Democrats.

Jindal discarded the criticism that was levied even by lawmakers who voted for SAVE.

"I don't take anything they say on the floor personally," the governor said. "You've got to have thick skin in this building."

Getting his wish on the budget deal was a rare victory for Jindal this session. Lawmakers rejected two centerpieces of Jindal's agenda: a push to give special protections in state law to people who oppose same-sex marriage and his effort to strip the Common Core education standards from Louisiana's public school classrooms.

The resolution to stop the open tray burn promised by state Rep. Gene Reynolds has gone through the legislature with flying colors.

"This will get us through until next year, and there will have to be a bill," he said. "I did it just to get us through this next

He says this way they will have plenty of time to work on a bill to stop the open tray burn method of munitions disposal at Camp Minden and across the state of Louisiana.

The resolution came about after a public meeting in November when all the agencies working to dispose of the millions of pounds of M6 propellant told the public it was a safe method. The public did not agree and the community pushed the Environmental Protection Agency to sponsor a dialogue committee tasked to come up with an alternate method of disposal.

After a month of discussion, the committee suggested six different methods other than the open tray burn. Explosive Service International was the bid chosen out of 10 and the selected method is the contained burn.

Following the dialogue committee's recommendations, a citizens advisory group was formed to oversee and allow community input into the process of the disposal as it takes place. They meet once per month with EPA officials to keep the public informed as to the ongoing decisions and process-

CLARIFICATION

In Tuesday's edition of the Minden Press-Herald, it was reported that the $300 per month proposed raise to Minden police officers was part of the two percent longevity raise all city employees receive. To clarify, the only ones required to get the two percent raise are Minden firefighters who have up to 20 years with the City of Minden. Mayor Tommy Davis says in the past, every city employee has received a two percent longevity raise. Davis says the city has the same amount of money in reserves as when the late mayor Bill Robertson passed away. What they don't have is the interest they used to make.

OPINION

EDITORIAL ROUND UP

American Press on littering in the state

It's time for a clean sweep in southwest Louisiana. Our entryways are difference-makers when it comes to first impressions and with the economic and population boom headed our way, now is the time to break our bad habits.

What bad habit, you ask? Litter.

Littering can be trash flying out the back of a pickup, deliberately throwing trash out of a window onto the roadway or depositing large amounts of trash into a ditch or illegal dumpsite. It also includes dumping the carcasses of hunting game, fish and crawfish, and leaving garage sale signs up long after the event is over.

Currently, those convicted of litter violations face between $175 and $1,000 in fines and up to eight hours in a litter abatement work program. Dumping violations can carry even more penalties and higher fines depending on the severity of the dumpsite and the damage to the environment.

A proposal nearing final passage in the Legislature would double each of those fines.

Senate Bill 33, by Rep. John A. "Johnny" Berthelot, R-Gonzales, would also divert the extra revenue to the retirement funds of the ticket-writer's respective

The bill passed the full House May 6 and the Senate May 27 with amendments.

The bill is pending in a House conference committee before going to Gov. Bobby Jindal for final approval.

Does the punishment fit the crime? We think so.

According to the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, litter costs Louisiana taxpayers $40 million annually. The money is spent on collecting and disposing the litter, enforcing litter laws, adjudicating litter violations and conducting anti-litter public information and education

We are Sportsman's Paradise. Litter has a direct effect on our economy, including real estate, tourism and new business. No one wants to live in a trashy state.

Litter isn't going to go away until southwest Louisiana residents care enough to reform their littering ways. Until they do, this is the consequence and we support

PERSPECTIVE

A most dangerous

One very elite group in New York City consists of eighteen people, just one of them a black American. In addition, based on bios, names, and photos, not a single member of this group is of Puerto Rican heritage. Yet the city they serve is more than half minority. So where's the liberal outrage?

Well, it turns out that the organization described above is the editorial board of the New York Times. You know, the "paper of record." These are the very same people, comfortably ensconced in their doorman buildings, who tell New York cops how to properly police the city's poor precincts, where murders are soaring.

Stop-and-frisk" may have lowered crime and saved thousands of black lives, but New York opinion-shapers groused that the police tactic disproportionately affected black New Yorkers. Kind of like the editorial board is disproportionately pasty-hued.

What are the odds that some of these influential Times editorialists have a son or daughter, a brother or sister, walking a beat in the Bronx? How about a nephew or uncle? The expression "slim to none" comes to

Meanwhile, a few miles north of Times Square, the City College of New York named its student center in honor of Assata Shakur. You may remember her as Joanne Chesimard, a convicted copkiller who fled to Cuba. In that same spirit, a teacher in suburban New York had her students send get-well cards to Wesley Cook when he fell ill recently. Wesley Cook?

That's Mumia Abu Jamal, the celebrated thug who brutally executed a cop. There is a wide and growing disconnect between liberal America and traditional America when it comes to the men and women who serve and protect. Far too many progressives look at uniformed police officers with dismissive disdain. Although they'll quickly yell for a cop the moment someone dents their Prius or Lexus or Tesla.

There is a striking parallel when it comes to our military. Former Defense Secretary Robert Gates said this:

"With each passing decade, fewer and fewer Americans know someone with military experience in their family or social circle."

Admiral Mike Mullen, once the most powerful military man in America, echoed that, saying, "America doesn't know its military and the United States military doesn't know America."

It brings to mind a pithy observation put forth by a DC pundit: "Nobody at any Washington dinner party tonight ... personally knows any enlisted man or woman now defending the nation."

The very same thing can be said of the swells in New York City, who attend dinner parties where no one actually knows a uniformed cop. One exception may be Mayor Bill de Blasio, the ultra-liberal cop-demonizer-in-chief. We hereby concede that he is probably on a first-name basis with the well-armed NYPD officers on his security

This is a very disturbing trend. Too many elite, educated Americans go through life without having any personal contact with a man or woman wearing a uniform. (Doormen and airline pilots don't count!) But they are never shy about denouncing cops and soldiers.

Right now there is an anticop conflagration in America, stoked by liberal cable networks, irresponsible public officials, and once-great newspapers that rush to judgment.

To be fair, the critics were absolutely correct in the most recent allegation of police misconduct. Corporal David Casebolt never should have drawn his gun at that pool party in Texas, nor should he have manhandled the teenager. Everyone knows that. Casebolt himself knows that, which is why he almost immediately resigned. Casebolt is the rare exception, but he'll be held up as the personification of all that's wrong with America's cops. Many of the folks screaming the loudest have never met a cop they liked. But that's mainly because they've never met a cop ... period! To them, cops are those beefy guys who guzzle Bud and have barbeques in Queens and Staten Island.

Times-Picayune state budget negotiations

Louisiana has a huge budget crisis. The state's lawmakers arrived at this year's legislative session knowing they had to do something significant to address a whopping $1.6 billion budget deficit. Filling a hole as big as that one requires an open spirit of cooperation, communication and negotiation between lawmakers and the governor. It requires two sides fully committed to doing what's best for Louisiana.

That's how it ought to be, at least. But for years now, state lawmakers attempting budget negotiations with Gov. Bobby Jindal have been forced to deal with a third party: an ideological purist who works out of Washington, has not been elected by Louisianans (or by anybody else) and has no motivation to act in the best interests of our state. That person is Grover Norquist, head of Americans for Tax Reform. And given the outsized power he wields in Louisiana, 11 Republican lawmakers wrote him a letter dated June 8 seeking his input on Louisiana budgetary matters.

Referring to the a bill that creates SAVE, a higher education tax credit that Jindal says would win Norquist's approval, Rep. Joel Robideaux, the head of the Legislature's state's taxwriting committee wrote, "We are deeply concerned about the clear and present danger posed by this bill. As conservative Republican legislators, we firmly believe SB 284 is the biggest threat to fiscal responsibility our state has ever faced."

Rep. Robideaux describes the legislation — which creates a tax credit to cover a currently nonexistent student fee - as a kind of Trojan horse that will allow future elected officials to "raise taxes on a nearly unlimited basis, and then claim revenue neutrality solely based on the creation of a purely fictional, procedural, phantom, paper tax credit."

Norquist responded almost immediately. "ATR does not support or oppose the SAVE Act," he wrote. "If you don't like the SAVE Act," he added, "why not find other offsetting tax cuts that are more to your liking?

Perhaps Norquist doesn't understand the context. (That would be understandable; he doesn't live here.) But the state is looking at a huge budget deficit. This is probably not the time for lawmakers to be looking for ways to cut taxes.

That response — "why not find other offsetting tax cuts?" - illustrates why lawmakers should not have had to consult Norquist in the first place. Gov. Jindal was elected as the chief executive of this state - he got 66 percent of the vote in the 2011 election — and he ought to have the final say regarding Louisiana's budg-

The pledge that Norquist created gives its signees no wiggle room. The version for governors reads: "I, _____, pledge to the taxpayers of the state of _____, that I will oppose and veto any and all efforts to increase taxes." Gov. Jindal should not have made such a promise. He should have maintained for himself the discretion to do whatever is in the best interest of Louisiana. But like so many other Republican officials eager to demonstrate their conservative bonafides, Gov. Jindal signed that pledge, and he has risked looking silly, risked looking heartless

When lawmakers in 2012 voted to renew a 4-cent per pack cigarette tax that was expiring, Gov. Jindal vetoed it. The next year, he opposed a monthly 2-cent tax on mobile phone service that would fund telecommunication services for the deaf. Citing Norquist's certain disapproval, Gov. Jindal said no. He later supported a bill that diverted a portion of the state's sales taxes to that fund, but it's doubtful that was better than what the Legislature had approved.

This is expected to be the governor's last legislative session, so there's little hope that the man who has signed a pledge from Americans for Tax Reform will reform his own ways. Here's hoping, though, that his successor pledges to always do what's best for Louisiana and avoids pledging allegiance to third parties who have no skin in the game.

Warriors get back on track to even series

CLEVELAND (AP) -Stephen Curry shook off Iman Shumpert with a drib-ble, stepped back behind the line and splashed a 3pointer that seemed to sub-merge a mute button on rocking and rolling Quicken Loans Arena.

Curry clenched both fists, slapped his chest and yelled, "C'mon!"

At last, this was the MVP and these were the Golden State Warriors so deep, so deadly.

Curry and Andre Iguodala scored 22 points apiece and the Warriors, showing why they were the league's best team all season, squared the NBA Finals at 2-2 on Thursday night with a 103-82 victory the Cleveland over Cavaliers.

Game 5 is Sunday night at Oakland's rambunctious Oracle Arena, where the teams split two overtime games last week. This wasn't desperation for the Warriors, but it was close as none of the 32 teams which have fallen behind 3-1 in the finals has won a "Tonight we came in with the mentality that we had to win this game," said

So they did. These guys are California cool.

"We played desperate out there, man," Klay Thompson said. "We played real hungry. It was just awesome to come out here and impose our will on both sides of the ball and play our brand of basket-ball. That's what's been winning us games all year."

LeBron James scored 20 points — 21 under his average in the series with 12 rebounds and eight assists, but Cleveland's megastar, who needed stitches to close a cut on his head sustained when banged it into a camera in the first half, didn't score in the fourth quarter and couldn't do enough for the undermanned Cavaliers.

LeBron exposed during pregame

CLEVELAND (AP) -LeBron James may need to call Janet Jackson to get some advice on how to handle wardrobe malfunc-

Moments before Game 4 of the NBA Finals began on Thursday night, James inadvertently exposed himself to millions watching on live television. As James was getting ready to take the court, an ABC camera moved in for a close-up.

Turns out it got a little too close.

James was adjusting his shorts as he started to tuck in his jersey. He briefly pulled down the black compression shorts he wore under his gold game shorts as well, exposing himself to an audience that has averaged about 18.5 million viewers in the first three games of the series.

It conjured memories of Jackson's performance at halftime of the Super Bowl in 2004 when Justin Timberlake tugged at Jackson's top and briefly exposed one of the singer's LITTLE LEAGUE

North Webster's White enjoys Five Star Challenge

BLAKE BRANCH

blake@press-herald.com

Over the past year, Devin White has emerged as a big time prospect coveted by top programs across the country, and last weekend White put his skills on display in Baltimore at the Rivals Five Star Challenge.

The Five Star Challenge is an event held at the Baltimore Ravens' M&T Bank Stadium, inviting some of the nation's top talent to come and compete against one another in a variety of ways.

"When we first got there it was just a lot of interviews and talking to the reporters," White said. "The next morning every-thing jumped off around 8:30 a.m. with drills and then one-on-ones."

White performed well at both the running back linebacker and spot, once again flashing the size and athleticism that has scouts drooling.

White also had a chance to visit Under Armour Headquarters.

"They showed us a lot of new stuff," White said. "It was crazy.

One thing White wasn't prepared for was the weath-

"I didn't know it wasn't going to be hot up there so I had my hoodie on," he said. "The city of Baltimore is different."

Having been busy on the camp circuit, White said there were some familiar faces in attendance.

"Rashard Lawrence from Neville was there too," White said. "Really there were a lot of people there I knew, and there were a lot of people there who knew me, I guess because at every camp I've stood out."

As one would expect when a large group of top prospects get together, there's plenty of politics going on behind hotel room doors and in between drills to try and lure uncommitted players to certain schools. White is no exception.

"Yeah a couple guys try to get in my ear," White said. "Saivion Smith from Florida (committed to LSU) was talking to me. He was like 'Come on bro, come on and join the Tigers.' A couple Auburn commits too, just a lot of guys telling me to check out this place or that place."

With a large number of 2016 making early verbal commitments, don't expect White to announce anytime soon, as he is determined to take his time before making a decision on his future.

White will continue his busy summer with a trip to the pacific northwest in July for The Opening, an event similar to the Five Star Challenge put on by Nike in Beaverton, Oregon.
