toms and were diagnosed through blood tests, according to a news release Thursday.

Nobody has died, department John Ford said.

Hurricane Danny strengthens in the Atlantic Ocean

MIAMI — Hurricane Danny has gained a little strength as it moves across the Atlantic.

The hurricane's maximum sustained winds early Friday had increased to near 85 mph (140 kph). The U.S. National Hurricane Center says some additional strengthening is possible but Danny should start weakening on Saturday.

The hurricane is centered about 985 miles (1,590 kilometers) east-southeast of the Leeward Islands and is moving west-northwest near 10 mph (17 kph).

Danny is tiny hurricane with hurricane force winds only extending outward up to 10 miles (20 kilometers) from its center.

Hurricane Danny doesn't currently pose a threat to land but the Hurricane Center says those in the Leeward Islands should monitor its progress.

Stage Stores to close about 90 stores

HOUSTON — Stages Stores Inc. plans to close about 90 underperforming locations.

The Houston-based retailer made the announcement Thursday.

President and CEO Michael Glazer says the closures involve stores representing 4 percent of total sales. Company officials did not immediately say which locations will close. Glazer says the company was challenged by the impact of a weaker peso and economic softness in parts of Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and New Mexico.

Stage Stores has about 850 locations in 40 states, with more than 14,000 employees. It operates as Stage, Bealls, Goody's Palais Royal and Peebles.

Springhill Sgt. William Frazier and Officer Cliff Causey were the responding and investigating officers.

The two women were placed under arrest and transported to Bayou Dorcheat Correctional Center for booking.

AROUND THE NATION

Cheating site logged federal subscribers with sensitive jobs

JACK GILLUM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. government employees with sensitive jobs in national security or law enforcement were among hundreds of federal workers found to be using government networks to access and pay membership fees to the cheating website Ashley Madison, The Associated Press has learned.

The list includes at least two assistant U.S. attorneys, an information technology administrator in the White House's support staff, a Justice Department investigator, a division chief, and a government hacker and counterterrorism employee at the Homeland Security Department. Others visited from networks operated by the Pentagon.

Federal policies vary by agency as to whether employees could visit websites during work hours like Ashley Madison, which could be considered akin to a dating website. But such use raises questions about what personal business is acceptable — and what websites are OK to visit — for U.S. workers on taxpayer time, especially those with sensitive jobs who could face blackmail.

Hackers this week released detailed records on millions of people registered with the website one month after the break-in at Ashley Madison's parent company, Toronto-based Avid Life Media Inc. The website — whose slogan is, "Life is short. Have an affair" — is marketed to facilitate extramarital affairs.

Few connecting from federal networks had listed government email accounts when subscribing. But the AP was able to trace their government Internet connections, logged by the website over five years and as recently as June. They encompass more than two dozen agencies, such as the departments of State, Justice, Energy, Treasury and Transportation. Others came from House or Senate computer networks.

Records also reveal subscribers signed up using state and municipal government networks nationwide, including those run by the New York Police Department, the nation's largest. "If anything comes to our attention indicating improper use of an NYPD computer, we will look into it and take appropriate action," said the NYPD's top spokesman, Stephen Davis.

The AP is not naming the government subscribers it found because they are not elected officials or accused of a crime.

Many federal customers appeared to use non-government email addresses with handles such as "sexlessmarriage," "soontobesingle" or "latinlovers." Some Justice Department employees also appeared to use prepaid credit cards to help preserve their anonymity but nonetheless connected to the service from their office computers.

"I was doing some things I shouldn't have been doing," a Justice Department investigator told the AP. Asked about the threat of blackmail, the investigator said if prompted he would reveal his actions to his family and employer to prevent it.

"I've worked too hard all my life to be a victim of blackmail. That wouldn't happen," he said. He spoke on condition of a n o n y m i t y because he was deeply embarrassed and not authorized by the government to speak to reporters using his name.

Defense Secretary Ash Carter confirmed Thursday the Pentagon was looking into the list of people who used military email addresses. Adultery can be a criminal offense under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

"I'm aware it," Carter said. "Of course it's an issue because conduct is very important. And we expect good conduct on the part of our people. ... The services are looking into it and as well they should be. Absolutely."

The AP's review was the first to reveal that federal workers used their office systems to access the site, based on their Internet Protocol addresses associated with credit card transactions. It focused on searching for government employees in especially sensitive positions who could perhaps become blackmail targets.

The government hacker at the Homeland Security Department, who did not respond to phone or email messages, included photographs of his wife and infant son on his Facebook page. One U.S. attorney declined through a spokesman to speak to the AP, and another did not return phone or email messages.

A White House spokesman said Thursday he could not immediately comment on the matter. The IT administrator in the White House did not return email messages.

While rules can vary by agency, Homeland Security rules, for instance, say devices should be used for only for official purposes. It also prescribes "limited personal use is authorized as long as this use does not interfere with official duties or cause degradation of network services." Employees are barred from using government computers to access "inappropriate sites" including those that are "obscene, hateful, harmful, malicious, hostile, threatening, abusive, vulgar, defamatory, profane, or racially, sexually, or ethnically objectionable."

The hackers who took credit for the break-in had accused the website's owners of deceit and incompetence, and said the company refused to bow to their demands to close the site. Avid Life released a statement calling the hackers criminals. It added that law enforcement in both the U.S. and Canada is investigating and declined comment beyond its statement Tuesday that it was investigating the hackers' claims.

same individuals that we were looking for on the shoplifting may be responsible for the house fire and also another break-in and vandalism of a residence.”

During interviews at the Webster Parish Sheriff's Office, Robinson says the four admitted to all three incidents.

They admitted to being responsible for a break-in and vandalism of a home on SE 1st Street, he said.

"They admitted to vandalizing it by spray-painting cabinets and countertops and the refrigerator," he said. "They were also responsible for the house fire."

He says they admitted to breaking into the house across the street from where they were living, which was for sale.

"Three of them were living together at one time," Robinson said. "They broke into the house across the street and then went and set the house (on Tharpe Lane) on fire.”

Hightower, Layfield and Adkins were arrested Monday, Aug. 17, and Gordon was arrested Tuesday, Aug. 18. All four were arrested at the Webster Parish Sheriff's Office following questioning on the incidents.

All four were transported to Bayou Dorcheat Correctional Center for booking.

The Advocate on debate about public statues and monuments

Public statues and monuments, by their nature, are meant to be permanent parts of a civic landscape. That doesn't mean such memorials should never be removed. But when we do consider taking them down, we should do so thoughtfully.

By that standard, the process to determine the fate of several Confederate monuments in New Orleans doesn't seem destined to inspire much public confidence in the result. That's a shame, given the dimensions of a controversy that's captured attention beyond New Orleans, bringing state officials with their own political agendas into the fray.

This summer, New Orleans Mayor Mitch Landrieu called for replacing the monuments with less controversial ones. The iconic images in question include the statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee atop a huge column at a St. Charles Avenue traffic circle, a statue of Confederate President Jefferson Davis on the street that bears his name, and the statue of Confederate Gen. P.G.T. Beauregard at City Park's entrance. Another monument commemorating an 1874 white rebellion against the city's biracial Reconstruction-era government also is part of the controversy.

The Confederacy advanced white supremacy and slavery, twin evils of American history. No reasonable person can favor celebrating those ideas. But even some people who despise the Confederacy's values have argued for keeping the monuments in place as a cautionary message to today's citizens — and those to come after us. This dispute also invites reflection on what moral yardstick we should use to mark the past in public memory. Should the statue of Andrew Jackson, slave owner and persecutor of Native Americans, be removed from Jackson Square, too? What about memorials to slave owners George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, whose faces adorn our national currency?

Given the difficulty of such questions, we shouldn't demonize our differences regarding the proper role of public monuments. That's why the polarizing quality of this summer's debate has been so regrettable.

Landrieu called for the monuments' removal before getting widespread public input, creating the perception that decisions about the status of the monuments had already been made. Two city panels have recommended removal of the monuments, and the issue now heads to the New Orleans City Council, which almost surely will follow the recommendations. Cynics might be forgiven for assuming that allowing public comments before the committee votes was really just for show.

This process has seemed more driven by theater than policy, creating a natural climate for political posturing by many other players. Gov. Bobby Jindal, as well as U.S. Sen. David Vitter, Lt. Gov. Jay Dardenne and Public Service Commissioner Scott Angelle, who are GOP contenders to replace Jindal, have come out against removing the statues. State Sen. John Bel Edwards, the lone Democrat in the governor's race, said the issue should be left to New Orleans residents.

Although state officials might shape this debate at the margins, the future of the monuments will, we suspect, ultimately be determined by the people of New Orleans, and that's as it should be. New Orleans needs a united citizenry to confront its broader challenges, such as crime and public education. But this summer's discussion of the Crescent City's Confederate statues, ostensibly aimed at civic unity, is sparking division instead.

Sadly, a debate about public monuments has become a monument to political folly.

PERSPECTIVE

Trump, Clinton, & the great race

Where would the Republicans be without Donald Trump? Well, it would certainly be a better world if your name happens to be Bush or Walker or Perry.

The campaign would be more sedate, but also far less interesting. No one would be talking about anchor babies, the 14th Amendment, and the need for a "big, beautiful, powerful wall" on our southern border.

This week, while entertaining a crowd in New Hampshire, Trump compared Jeb Bush to Sominex, joking that his rival was putting people to sleep at a similar event down the street. What politician talks like that? Trump not only gets away with it, but wins new converts with every brazen insult.

Yes, Donald Trump has stolen the show thus far. It's partly his slash-and-burn style, but behind that style there is also some substance - he regularly hammers both parties and the Washington establishment on things like the border, our treatment of wounded warriors, and a lack of respect for America in the age of Obama.

Trump has been pronounced dead and buried on numerous occasions, especially when he denigrated John McCain's war record, but the interestingly-coiled tycoon makes Lazarus look like a piker.

Back to the opening question: Where would the Republican Party be without Donald Trump? More predictable, more boring, far less inclined to confront some vexing issues facing Americans.

On the other side, where would the Democratic Party be without Hillary Clinton? That question seems to terrify the Democratic leadership. Who are their alternatives? A 73-year-old socialist with a Trump-like loathing of the establishment? An amiable and sometimes buffoonish 72-year-old vice president? A former Maryland governor who begged forgiveness for saying "all lives matter." These are not the '27 Yankees; they aren't even the '62 Mets.

As our pal and lifelong Democrat Kirsten Powers writes this week, party leaders are shielding Clinton from any and all competition. Yes, there will be a handful of debates, but not until October. Party boss Debbie Wasserman Schultz has taken on the role of Hillary Clinton's protector-in-chief.

And the Democratic front-runner really seems to need protecting. When she deigned to briefly speak with the media this week, Mrs. Clinton wilted under tough questioning from FNC's Ed Henry about that mysterious private server. As much as Donald Trump relishes the attention, Hillary Clinton obviously despises that part of the political process.

Much as she might wish, the email situation will not go away, certainly not before the FBI issues a report in a few months. The drip, drip, drip of revelations and accusations will continue to torture Hillary Clinton, her campaign, and her acolytes. She expected an unobstructed march to the nomination, but now worries about an obstruction of justice charge.

Moving forward, Americans crave a strong leader who can reinvigorate the moribund economy, deport criminal illegal aliens who terrorize our cities, reduce the rising crime rate, and confront the Islamic jihadists who are running wild around the world.

Donald Trump is on the offensive right now, smacking Republicans, Democrats, foreign governments, and political correctness. Meanwhile, Hillary Clinton is playing defense, trying desperately to protect her lead and run out the clock.

These are the dog days (named for the dog star Sirius in the constellation Canis Major, which rises in the summer). Many Americans are on vacation and relaxing, but the campaign season has already kicked into high gear.

That's a very good thing in a troubled nation, and we owe a debt of gratitude to a certain real estate tycoon for shaking things up.

Does Donald Trump have the endurance of a marathon runner, or is he a sprinter whose fast-twitch fibers will soon cramp up and give out? We will find out... sooner or later.

EDITORIAL
ROUND UP

The News-Star on voting for gubernatorial candidates

In case the signs popping up on every street corner haven't given you a clue, we're fully into election season.

In Louisiana, we will have an opportunity to go to the polls and select a governor who will be focused on the serious issues facing our state.

Fortunately, voters will have a true selection of highly qualified candidates from which to choose, if those who are crisscrossing the state now on the campaign trail remain in the race. We're inspired by the potential and want to learn more about what the candidates plan.

All of the announced candidates have said they'll call a fiscal special session soon after taking office to start working on the serious financial issues facing the state.

But that's just a starting point. Candidates, what's your plan? If elected governor, what would you propose to do on these issues:

Aligning the state's expenses with available revenue.

Developing a reliable method to fund higher education.

Examining the privatization of the state's safety-net public health system and determining what's working and what's not.

Determining the best way to educate our children so they are successful in a global economy.

Louisiana needs a governor who's focused on solving our big problems and brings creative solutions to the table. We need someone who understands how to work collaboratively with all stakeholders to achieve his goals, and who also understands that intelligent people who bring much to the table may not always agree with him. That doesn't mean they deserve to be banished.

We need a governor who hires smart people to serve in his cabinet positions, people who are as dedicated as the state's top official to moving Louisiana forward. And, we need a governor who supports transparency and requires his cabinet to do the same.

We're weary of a state operated in absentia by a governor whose personal political aspirations have overshadowed the talent, ability and hope for a better future Bobby Jindal brought to the table when first elected.

We're ready for a new beginning. Candidates, bring it on!

Give us your two cents!

LSU AG CENTER

State fair hay contest

LEE FAULK

Special to the Press-Herald

The LSU AgCenter is proud to announce the annual LSU AgCenter State Fair Hay Quality Contest to be held at the State Fair of Louisiana in Shreveport this October.

The Louisiana Hay Contest was developed to showcase farmers and ranchers in our area that consistently produce quality forages for livestock. Categories in which farmers and ranchers can enter forages include warm-season perennial forages (bahiagrass, bermudagrass, mixed grasses, etc.); winter-annual forages (ryegrass, ryegrass-clover, etc.); miscellaneous legumes (alfalfa, clovers, etc), and baleage. Cash and other prizes will be awarded to the winner of each class. Each class winner will be awarded $100, and the $15 analysis fee will be refunded for the second place entry in each class. Deadline to enter the contest is September 24.

Forage sampling is an important way for livestock owners to understand the quality of the hay they are feeding their animals. All livestock owners are encouraged to sample their forages to determine quality.

For more information on forage sampling, or to enter hay into the LSU AgCenter State Fair Hay Quality Contest, contact Lee Faulk at the LSU AgCenter Webster Parish Extension Office at 318-371-1371.

HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL

Apaches kick off tonight

BLAKE BRANCH
blake@press-herald.com

The Glenbrook Apaches will be the first Webster Parish team back on the gridiron when they take on 4A Copiah Academy tonight in Gallman, Mississippi.

The Apaches have been working hard this week at practice in preparation for the big boys from Copiah.

"They are a really, really big football team," head coach Caleb Carmikle said. "They have a bunch of big guys up front and a little bit of speed. In terms of scheme they're pretty similar to what we run. They're just going to do what they do and try to push us around."

The Apaches will counter with a trio of senior linebackers in Lyle Reagan, Garrett Sanders and Drennan Keen. Sophomore defensive tackle Nick Moses (6'2", 260) should help slow the run game as well.

Carmikle has had nothing but rave reviews for his defense, led by fellow first year coach and defensive coordinator Blake Sorey.

But things haven't progressed as quickly on offense, which could make for a long night.

"Our problems have been mostly mental errors," Carmikle said. "Lack of discipline and bad penalties; very fixable issues."

Kickoff is set for 7 p.m. at Copiah Academy.

NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE

NFL head coaches fed up with practice fights

SPARTANBURG, S.C.

— Carolina Panthers coach Ron Rivera offered this edict to his players before the start of this week's joint practices with the Miami Dolphins: You fight, you're out.

"We told our guys if you get thrown off the field, I'm going to treat you like you got thrown out of a game," Rivera said Thursday.

So players wouldn't return to practice.

Dolphins coach Joe Philbin agreed with the approach, and it has worked.

Skirmishes at camps are not new, and to some extent even condoned. But Rivera and Philbin are among a group of coaches around the league who have spoken out to curb the fighting that has garnered training camps headlines in an effort to set the tone for workouts.

And when coaches speak out, their voices are being heard.

Arizona Cardinals coach Bruce Arians said he has no patience for fighting in training camp, issuing a zero tolerance policy. If players fight, they run.

"It's not tolerated here," Arians said. "Coaches that believe in it, they need to get new jobs."

The Dolphins and Panthers completed two days of fight-free work on Thursday, aside from one very minor scuffle between Panthers offensive lineman Michael Oher and Dolphins defensive end Olivier Vernon on Wednesday.

"We talked to our players about making sure we took advantage of the opportunity," Rivera said. "We didn't come here to be disruptive and fight, we came here to get better as a football team."

Philbin said he and Rivera took measures before practices to make sure players were getting the message, calling them together in a group near midfield. And once practice started, the Rivera and Philbin split up and went to different fields, each with authority to discipline the opposing team's players.

"I told our team we're not coming here to have a bar room brawl — and If we want to do that, we can stay down in Florida," Philbin said. "We came down here to compete and to get tougher and to get a little more physical against a really good football team."

Indianapolis Colts coach Chuck Pagano issued a similar statement to his team before scrimmages with the Chicago Bears.

Pagano didn't want a repeat of the sideline-clearing brawl that happened earlier this summer between the Washington Redskins and Houston Texans, or even the fights that marred a joint practice between the Dallas Cowboys and St. Louis Rams earlier this week.

"If guys fight, if you do it in the game, they're going to throw you out — and you're hurting the team. So you can't do it," Pagano said. "... Treat them like we treat ourselves. It's not about the chirping and the jaw jacking and taking cheap shots. It's about getting better."

HIGH SCHOOL SOFTBALL

LADY APACHES TOP UCA, 2-1

BLAKE BRANCH
blake@press-herald.com

The Glenbrook Lady Apaches picked up a big win over district foe Union Christian Academy on Thursday, edging the Lions 2-1.

Alyssa Martin was the driving force behind the win, tossing a one-hitter from the circle and driving in a run the first inning. Glenbrook would never surrender that early lead.

Martin singles in Aubrie Dickson who reached on a single and moved into scoring position on a catcher interference call on UCA.

Aubrie Dickson drove in the second run on a fielder's choice in the fifth inning.

UCA would push one run across in the top of the sixth inning, but Martin would slam the door on a UCA comeback, inducing a fly ball to Kate Marvin at second base to end the game.

The win moves Glenbrook's record to 9-3 and puts them in great shape in district 6AA with a 1-1 record.

Caitlyn Jenner could face manslaughter in crash, police say

LOS ANGELES — Sheriff's investigators plan to recommend that prosecutors file a vehicular manslaughter charge against Caitlyn Jenner for her role in a fatal car crash last February, officials said Thursday.

Investigators found that Jenner was driving "unsafe for the prevailing road conditions" when her SUV rear-ended a Lexus, Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department spokeswoman Nicole Nishida said.

Jenner was hauling an off-road vehicle on a trailer behind her Cadillac Escalade on Feb. 7 when she steered to avoid cars slowing for a traffic light in front of her on the Pacific Coast Highway in Malibu.

Jenner's SUV rear-ended two cars, pushing the Lexus into oncoming traffic and also hitting a Prius. The Lexus driver, 69-year-old Kim Howe, was killed when her car was struck head-on by a Hummer.

The case will be presented to prosecutors for final review next week, Nishida said. The district attorney's office will determine what charges Jenner ultimately faces.

If convicted of such a charge, Jenner could face up to one year in county jail.

Jenner's attorney Blair Berk declined comment.

The fatal crash occurred months before Caitlyn Jenner's transition. She was formerly known as Bruce Jenner, the 1976 Olympic decathlon champion and Kim Kardashian's stepfather.

Howe's stepchildren have filed suit against Jenner claiming they've suffered enormous damages.

The lawsuit by Dana Redmond and William Howe does not specify how much they are seeking. They claim Jenner was negligent when she collided with their stepmother's car, causing them and other relatives "great losses."

Attorneys for Howe's step-children, Dana Redmond and William Howe, did not immediately return email messages seeking comment.

Another woman, Jessica Steindorff, who was driving the Prius, also filed suit seeking unspecified damages. A phone message for Steindorff's attorney, Brad Simon, was not immediately returned on Thursday.

Jenner's transition has played out in public over the past several months and included a high-profile interview with ABC's Diane Sawyer last April, in which Jenner, appearing nervous at first, declared, "Yes, for all intents and purposes, I am a woman."

She appeared on the July cover of Vanity Fair — her transition complete — with a photo of a long-haired Jenner in a strapless corset, legs crossed, sitting on a stool. The image was shot by famed celeb photographer Annie Leibovitz. Inside, more images depict Jenner in gold lame, a black bustier and a cleavage-baring, off-the-shoulder gown.

Jenner also debuted a new Twitter account with: "I'm so happy after such a long struggle to be living my true self. Welcome to the world Caitlyn. Can't wait for you to get to know her/me." In about three hours, the account had more than 860,000 followers.

Flamboyant Trump evolved into cautious businessman

NEW YORK — Donald Trump sells himself as a bold empire-builder, the kind of businessman who could force through big changes in Washington as president.

Yet for all his bravado — "I've done an amazing job," the Republican White House hopeful boasted during his announcement speech — a review of the billionaire's financial filings and recent deals suggests he's no swashbuckler.

Trump is reluctant to take on debt after it nearly ruined him in the 1990s. He holds few stocks for someone of his wealth and has grown increasingly dependent on making money by lending out his name to others rather than developing real estate himself.

"People think of him as big. They see the Trump name around the world.

But that's not his money," says Don Peebles, a real estate developer who oversees a $5 billion real estate portfolio. "He's not taking big risks."

That's not a knock. Peebles calls Trump a "pioneer," praising his move into a nearly risk-free business. In an industry prone to booms and bust, say branding experts and rival developers, it's a shrewd shift that only someone with Trump's name recognition could pull off. In essence, Trump gets a stream of fees without risking any of his own money.

But it's not the image that Trump is projecting as a candidate for president, given that his White House campaign is built around his prowess in the boardroom. The candidate's company, the Trump Organization, rejects any suggestion he's playing it

"We have been major buyers of properties," said the candidate's son, Eric Trump, who oversees real estate development and acquisitions at the Trump Organization. "We believe in owning dirt."

A few hoteliers had created buzz by putting their names on buildings — think Conrad Hilton of Hilton Hotels — when Donald Trump was getting his start in the 1970s, but the idea hadn't really caught on in luxury residential real estate. Trump made it work, thanks to unabashed love of glitz and glamour — and some good timing.

He broke ground on New York's Trump Tower in 1980, just before New York City's resurgence from near bankruptcy and the start of the longest bull stock market in history. He bought and built more and diversified into airlines and casinos — all with his name leading the way.

Then boom turned bust in the late 80s, and Trump lost nearly everything. Unable to pay back billions of dollars of debt, he threatened to tie up lenders in court, threw two of his casinos into bankruptcy, cut a series of deals that erased most of his personal liability, then began buying and building once again.

In 2001, he completed the 90-story Trump World Tower, a residential building across from the United Nations in New York. Three years later, he launched his runaway TV hit "The Apprentice" and his brand began to take off as a business in and of itself. Today you can buy a myriad of Trump-labeled products, including cologne and cufflinks, men's suits and furniture and fragrances.

Not all the branding deals have gone smoothly. Condo buyers in failed Trump-named properties in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and Baja, Mexico, have claimed in lawsuits that the billionaire misled them into believing he was more involved in the projects than just lending his name. Trump won the Fort Lauderdale case and settled the one in Baja.

It's difficult to know how much risk Trump is taking with his money today, because it's not clear how much he's got.

In a recently released list of assets, he estimated his worth at $8.7 billion — more than double the figure calculated by Forbes magazine, which has been tracking his wealth for three decades. Trump pegged the biggest line item as "real estate licensing deals, brand and branded developments" worth $3.3 billion — or nearly 40 percent of his net worth.

One area where Trump is digging into his own pocket is golf resorts. Last year, he bought Ireland's Doonbeg club on the Atlantic coast and Scotland's Turnberry Resort, the site of several British Opens and the 17th course in his collection.

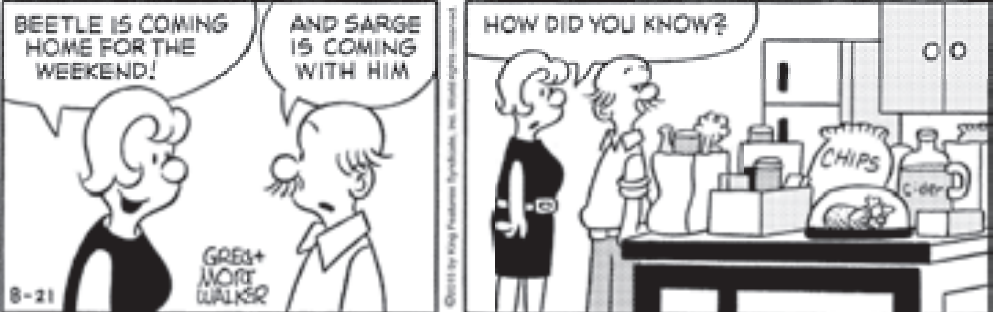

Eric Trump says the golf ventures are doing "fantastically" well. Others aren't so sure, noting that club membership and play in general have dropped since the financial crisis.

"It's is not a booming business and yet he wants us to believe that his is," says Ron Whitten, a senior editor at Golf Digest. If Trump is making money on his golf clubs, Whitten says, "he is the only one doing that."

$3,000 reward for slain Shreveport officer's Glock

SHREVEPORT — Northwest Louisiana authorities are offering $3,000 for information leading to the .40-caliber Glock pistol carried by a Shreveport officer when he was killed on Aug. 5.

A notice on the Shreveport Police Department's Facebook page says the reward is for information leading directly to the semiautomatic Glock Model 22 issued to Officer Thomas LaValley.

LaValley was killed when he went into a house where a neighbor said a fugitive was threatening residents. Twenty-seven-year-old Grover Cannon of Shreveport has been booked with capital murder in his death.

The notice posted Wednesday says Shreveport police are offering $2,500, with another $500 from Shreveport-Caddo Crime Stoppers.
