Costs of Jindal's state police security detail has doubled

MELINDA DESLATTE

BATON ROUGE — The cost of Gov. Bobby Jindal's security detail has doubled to more than $3 million since the Republican governor entered office nearly eight years ago, but the Louisiana State Police says the hefty price increase isn't largely driven by Jindal's frequent travel.

Protective services for the governor cost just under $1.5 million in the 2007-08 budget year when Jindal first took office. The price tag rose to $3.1 million in the 2014-15 year that ended June 30, according to data provided to The Associated Press.

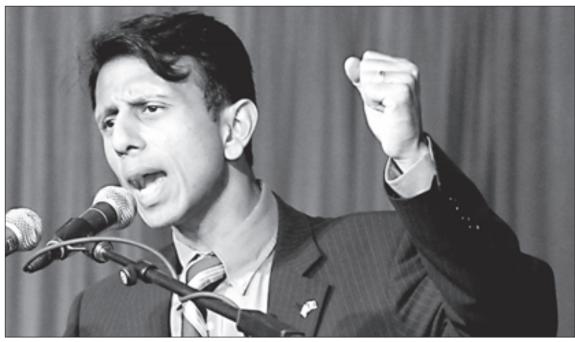

State lawmakers have complained about taxpayers footing the bill for Jindal's trooper bodyguards as the governor increased his out-of-state trips, seeking to raise his national profile and readying for a GOP presidential campaign he announced June 24.

Col. Mike Edmonson, the superintendent of state police, acknowledged that Jindal's frequent travel boosted some costs for the state police bodyguards who have hotel, flight and car rental expenses they wouldn't have otherwise.

"The bottom line is when he goes, we go. That's what we're mandated to do," said Edmonson, a Jindal appointee. "He's still governor. It doesn't matter if he's instate or out of state."

However, Edmonson said the growing price tag for the Jindal family security detail shouldn't be blamed on travel.

He noted state troopers received a sizable pay raise, averaging 20 percent, over the last year that he said accounted for much of an $830,000 growth in salary and benefit costs for the protective services detail over the last year alone.

"I'm seeing more of an increase because the troopers' rate of pay has gone up," he said.

Lawmakers raised the salaries again this year, though that second pay hike wasn't reflected in the security cost data because it didn't take effect until July 1.

Benefit expenses for troopers also have increased in recent years, and the costs of protecting Jindal's three children, as they've grown older and their afterschool activities increased, also have swelled, said Maj. Doug Cain, a state police spokesman.

The price tag of travel-related spending - on taxis, flights, hotels and car rentals - have fluctuated yearly, costing taxpayers a total of about $643,000 over all eight years Jindal's been in

According to the state police data, those expenses reached a high of more than $98,000 in the 2011-12 budget year, when Jindal was traveling for Republican candidates and being talked about as a possible vice-presidential contender.

Those costs are edging up again. Travel-specific spending for the governor's state police bodyguards neared $98,000 in the last budget year. Edmonson expects them to be larger this year, because of Jindal's White House bid.

The governor's been away from Louisiana two-thirds of the days since kicking off his campaign, mainly in the early voting state of Iowa, according to an AP tally based on campaign event announcements.

Jindal hasn't refunded the state for any trooper expenses related to campaign trips.

Lawmakers sought to ban the state police from paying for the governor's security detail to travel for campaign events in this year's budget. Jindal vetoed the attempt.

modal Connector Program; and to provide for the interruption of deposits into the Budget Stabilization Subfund and the Transportation Trust Subfund the year that the state has a deficit and the following year with the resumption of deposit of mineral revenues in the Budget and Transportation Stabilization Trust

State rep. Gene Reynolds, district 10, says this amendment is a must in order to bolster the amount of money they need to begin addressing the state's traffic infrastructure system of roads and bridges. "What that does is it is a setup to use only for transportation projects, roads and bridges," he said. "We said, with parameters, when the rainy day fund gets to a certain percent, it goes into transportation. Affairs The Public

Research Council indicates a vote in favor would "steer mineral revenue to a new transportation projects fund and restructure the Budget Stabilization Fund." "The main purpose of this proposed amendment is to create a constitutionally protected fund for state transportation projects," reports the PAR guide. "The amendment does not raise taxes. It does not change the state's existing Transportation Trust Fund, which will continue to be the primary source of state infrastructure spending. A vote against would leave the current revenue flow and Budget Stabilization Fund intact.

Amendment 2 – Allows the state treasurer the option of investing in the state infrastructure bank. 'Do you support an amendment to authorize the investment of funds for a state infrastructure bank to be used solely for transportation projects?'

Reynolds says this one allows for the treasurer of the state to transfer funds into that infrastructure bank.

"We would borrow money for construction projects from that infrastructure bank and pay it back with interest just like a regular bank," he said. "Twentythree other states have already done this and it's worked very well."

According to the PAR guide, the amendment would provide another option for financing the infrastructure bank.

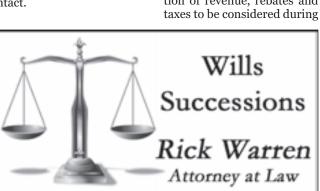

"It would allow the state treasurer to invest with the bank," PAR reports. "The state always has money that needs to be invested, such as cash in dedicated funds or tax revenue that is not immediately spent. Voters last year rejected a similar proposed amendment; however, the legislature at the time had not created an infrastructure

One was created during the 2015 legislative session. A vote for would allow the treasurer to invest public funds in a state infrastructure bank. A vote against would require the newly created infrastructure bank to rely on other financing.

Reynolds says this one is also a must pass because it also would insure funds for roads and bridges. He says 47 percent of Louisiana's bridges are in disrepair and in dire need to be fixed.

Amendment 3 - Provides new guidelines for legislation in a fiscal session.

rush IS On

Looking at the calendar today seemed startling. Can it be this late in the year already? So many things we wanted to do and haven't done them yet. So many things we must do soon.

The October calendar is being crossed off too quickly. Two family birthdays down and one more to go. An associational meeting coming up, surgery for a family member, and a trip to Dallas for a show-

Every October for the past few years I've hosted a few friends for lunch. Always a good time of fellowship with some sweet ladies. As of yet, I haven't placed it on my calendar, so I must find a time to work it in. We do one in the spring and one in the fall.

I enjoy having these people in our home, so I must plan a menu and select a date. ASAP.

Then, just a few days ago someone posted on Face book there are only ___ Fridays till Christmas. Oh, don't do that to me. We haven't even done Halloween yet and then there is the equally busy month of this) and the very next week, Thanksgiving dinner for the family. This family gathering is a highlight of the year. Usually all the children, grandchilaren ana great granachiiaren can make it for Thanksgiving, where some must share Christmas with other families.

Actually, our Thanksgiving dinner is not much different from the one we have for Christmas. The children always seem to want chicken and dressing with the usual sides, salads and desserts. A big difference is the array of Christmas candies available in December, which seem to be their favorite part of the holiday food. December will also find us celebrating morebirthdays and a day trip with our Seniors from church.

So, it seems the "rush" has already begun.

But, first, we must take ourselves to the polls and elect a new governor and other state and local officials. This is always so involved when you don't personally know the candidates. If we listen to all the TV ads, we'll find that none of them are really qualified. So what does one do?

I was always told one should not talk about money, religion and politics or you would surely offend your listeners, or readers. as the case may be. So, that's enough of Considering all that lies immediately ahead, it's probably time for me to get up and get to work.

I love the fall and now its upon us, with such busy days ahead. But let's take the time to enjoy the cool temperatures and beautifully colored foliage.

PERSPECTIVE

Escaping tyranny

North Korea is called the "worst place on earth" for good reason. Thousands of people are tortured. Some North Koreans eat rodents to try to survive, and many starve anyway. In winter, they freeze. No one but the dictator has any true freedom, and no one is allowed to leave.

One person who understands that is Yeonmi Park. Now she's 22. But for 16 years, she did amazing things "In Order to Live." That is the title of her new book.

We didn't have enough food. I had to see dead bodies in the streets," she says. Still, she and other North Koreans worshipped the late "Dear Leader," Kim Jong Il, and his son, current leader and "Brilliant Comrade," Kim Jong Un. Yeonmi told my TV studio audience that she believed Kim "could read my mind."

When she was allowed to attend school. Yeonmi was taught to hate Americans. "We have to call all Americans 'bastards'. My math problem was 'you had four American bastards and you could choke two, how many American bastards are left to kill'? North Korea educates people that our suffering is because of these bad American bastards. Because of them, we are starving." But tiny bits of freedom can undermine a regime's monopoly on thought. For Yeonmi, a black-market DVD of a Western film made a dif-

"I watched the movie 'Titanic' and I was shocked. Like, how could this kind of ridiculous film exist? I'd never seen people dying for love, except dying for the regime and the party.'

When Yeonmi was thirteen, she and her mother escaped into China, where they were kidnapped and sold into slavery: "Chinese government, if they catch us, will sell us back to North Korea, so we are very vulnerable in China. Chinese people, they know that."

Sex traffickers took advantage of that vulnerability. "That's what happened to both of us, my mother and me." At the time, she didn't know what sex was. "I didn't even know what kissing was."

For two years, she was an abused captive.

Then a Protestant mission helped her escape to South Korea by walking across the Gobi Desert.

South Korea "was another shock," because she realized that freedom meant more than just having food — it meant making her own decisions.

"I thought freedom meant wearing jeans or watching movies without worrying about getting arrested or executed," says Yeonmi, "but what freedom meant in South Korea was you've got to think for yourself. They were asking me, 'What do you think about this? What do you want to do with your life? What do you like to eat?' I was so upset, like, 'Tell me what to do, tell me what to wear!"

South Koreans sneered at North Korean escapees. "Everybody told me I was a loser, because I am from communism country. I don't have any knowledge of Western culture."

Books became the next step in her journey. "I devoured books," she says. "One day, I picked up a book called 'Animal Farm.' That changed my life. In that book, I saw myself. I saw my grandmother."

The George Orwell allegory about how noble-sounding revolutions can turn into tyranny resonated with Yeonmi. "I could understand what really had happened to me and what really had happened to North Korea."

Today she fears for family members who have been unable to escape: "My relatives, they're back in North Korea, and now Kim Jung Un, that fat guy doesn't like me, so he's using my relatives and denouncing me as a human rights propaganda puppet of the CIA. I'm hoping for the best — that they are safe and one day I can see them again."

Since today so many Americans call themselves "victims," I asked Yeomni if she was a victim.

She said absolutely not. "I am not a victim. I am grateful I was born in North Korea and escaped ... I would go through the same journey to be free.

I pushed back, asking, "Starving and being sold into sex slavery, you would do it again?"

"Yes," she answered. "I would do that again to be free.'

PERSPECTIVE

Locks are for honest people

I'm really concerned about the recent rash of shootings we've had in our country. Some people are advocating strengthening our guns laws. That may sound good on paper, but I wonder if it will work in It's like the gun free zones. I'm in favor of having the person who came up with that idea be the one designated to go out and confront the individual with the AK - dressed in camo and body armor - and remind him that he is in violation of that ordinance.

One day my dad used this phrase: "Locks are for honest people." I asked him what that meant. He said, "Well, if an honest man finds your house locked, he leaves. If a dishonest man finds your house locked, he'll break the lock. And if he wants in your house bad enough, he'll bring a bulldozer." I agree we should make it very difficult to get assault weapons and clips that hold a large amount of ammunition. I came up this questionnaire for people who want to purchase such weapons:

1. Do you plan to use your assault weapon to murder one or more persons? ____Yes __

2. If you marked yes above, would you be targeting a ____ School? _House of Worship? Workplace? __Friend or Relative? __ Other (please describe below) 3. How soon are you planning your mass shooting? _Soon __ Not

RANDY ROGERS

Are you working on, or have you recently completed, your mani-Yes_

After the fact, would your neighbors tell the news media that you were a loner, quiet, someone who likes to keep to himself? ___Yes

Would you mind if we kept your name in a database of potential mass murderers? _

If you recall the murders at Sandy Hook Elementary in New Jersey some years ago, when faced with a locked security door, the perpetrator didn't bring a bulldozer, he shot out the side window to gain entry to the school. (See Daddy's earlier lesson). Afterward, disgusted, I went on line and ordered some bumper stickers that read: "If you want to stop school shootings, arm a janitor." Since then, because there've been other shootings at other venues, I amended that to: "arm an usher... arm a deacon.

I've always been a believer in the Boy Scott motto: Be Prepared. On that day in New Jersey, we weren't prepared to defend those little kids sitting in their classroom. We depended on locks and unarmed honest people. So what do we do now to keep this from happening again? For one, I'd put some returning Iraq or Afghanistan war vets on the payroll. Taking a page from the air marshals, they would not wear a uniform. Only a handful of officials would know they were armed - leaving the intruder unsure from where and from whom their opposition might come. Once the perp is killed or captured, I'd like the local sheriff or police chief to speak to the media in Old Wild West fashion: "To all those planning something like this today; from now on, this is how you can expect to end your days. Someone will always be here armed and ready - waiting for you. You won't know who they are. And they'll be trained to stop you on the steps long before you get an opportunity to hurt innocent people. Now, because we're prepared, the odds are in OUR favor."

The classes were divided into grades and subjects, so that parents with children in different grades would have a chance to take in information from the different instructors

"Many parents commented that the information they received would be very helpful in working with their children," staff development facilitator Marty Kilgore said. "The first Parent University for Webster Parish Schools was a success and we look forward to offering this opportunity to parents again next year."

NCAAF Florida QB Grier

suspended for PED's GAINESVILLE, Fla.

Florida coach Jim McElwain has insisted for months that he has two quarterbacks capable of producing in Southeastern Conference.

The eighth-ranked Gators will find out soon if McElwain was being completely truthful.

Starter Will Grier was suspended one year Monday for violating the NCAA's policy on performance-enhancing drugs. Grier, who gained 20 pounds in his first 18 months on campus, failed a drug test in the last two weeks.

Grier said he took an over-the-counter supplement, but did not specify which one. Grier delivered a heartfelt apology to teammates before doing the same publicly.

"I did not check with the medical staff before taking it," Grier said. "I really hope that people can learn from this, learn from my mistake. I'm really, really sorry to everyone. Just really sorry."

The school said it will appeal. The Gators (6-0, 4-0 SEC) are not facing a forfeiture of wins, and Grier won't lose any eligibility. He will return as a third-year sophomore next October.

Steelers come back to beat Chargers SAN DIEGO - Mike

Tomlin and Le'Veon Bell knew exactly what had to happen.

With five seconds left, the Pittsburgh Steelers down by three points and the ball inside the 1, Bell had to get into the end zone.

It was a wildcat way to win, which the Steelers did 24-20, stunning the San Diego Chargers and sending tens of thousands of Terrible Towel-waving Pittsburgh fans into delirium at Qualcomm Stadium.

Bell took the direct snap, ran left and was slowed in traffic before diving for the end zone and getting the ball across the line as Donald Butler dragged him down.

"It was time to go to the mattresses, if you will," said Tomlin, the Steelers' coach. "We had to do what was required to win. Le'Veon gave us an opportunity to win, and we were trying to do everything we could to move the football."

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Spurrier calls it quits, ending incredible career at Duke (1987-89), Florida

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) South Carolina coach Steve Spurrier has told his players that he is retiring, effective immediately.

The 70-year-old coach informed players of his decision Monday night, said a person close to the situation. The person spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because South Carolina hasn't publicly announced Spurrier's decision.

South Carolina hasn't named an interim coach, but likely would announce someone to finish out the season by Wednesday, the person said.

The Gamecocks are 2-4 overall and 0-4 in the Southeastern Conference for the first time in Spurrier's 23 seasons coaching in the league at Florida and South Carolina.

Spurrier, in the middle of his 11th season at South Carolina, did not return messages from the AP seeking comment.

The coach's weekly press conference is still scheduled to be held at noon Tuesday. South Carolina freshman offensive lineman Christian Pellage said on Twitter,

"What a c r a z y day... I m blessed to say I was coached by a legend. Best of luck to o u

Coach Spurrier. Stay cocky!"

Spurrier considered leaving last December after the Gamecocks went 6-6 in the regular season. But the team Miami in Independence Bowl, a victory that seemed to re-energize him.

SPURRIER

He said this summer he planned to coach two or three more years, then extended that to four or five years when several recruits who had committed to South Carolina backed away before signing day in February.

Then in July, Spurrier held a defiant news conference, telling Gamecocks fans not to listen to "enemies" questioning his commitment level, or implying he could no longer effectively coach at his age.

"We haven't lost it," Spurrier said in the summer. "We've got a dang, good

But things have quickly spiraled downward this sea-

The Gamecocks lost to Kentucky at home in the season's second week, then were blown out by SEC Eastern Division rival Georgia, 52-20, a week later.

Losses at Missouri and No. 6 LSU last week guaranteed Spurrier no better than a break-even season. Spurrier had never had a losing season in 25 previous seasons coaching in college (1990-2001) and South Carolina. South Carolina's inconsistency on offense this season has surely frustrated Spurrier, a Heisman Trophy winning quarterback at Florida who played for San Francisco and Tampa Bay in the NFL. After beginning his coaching career in the USFL, and leading Duke, he returned to the Swamp and took the Gators to a national championship with a highflying, Fun-n-Gun attack.

The Gamecocks are 11th in total offense in the SEC, averaging 341 yards a game.

The high-water mark of Spurrier's 11 seasons at South Carolina was from 2011-13. The Gamecocks went 11-2 each season, led by quarterback Connor Shaw and top NFL draft picks like defensive end Jadeveon Clowney, receiver Alshon Jeffery and running back Marcus Lattimore.

The Gamecocks have used three starting quarterbacks through the first half of this season, including former walk-on Perry Orth and true freshman in Lorenzo South Carolina plays at home against Vanderbilt (2-3, 0-2) on Saturday.

Spurrier is the winningest coach ever at South Carolina and Florida. During his tenure at Florida he led the Gators to six SEC titles and a national championship before leaving his alma mater to see what he could do in the NFL.

After two losing seasons with the Washington Redskins he returned to the SEC with South Carolina in 2005 and turned the perennially mediocre Gamecocks into championship contenders.

Spurrier, who was 35-21 with the USFL's Tampa Bay Bandits from 1983-85, started his college head coaching career at Duke. He has a 228-89-2 career record with the Blue Devils, Gators and Gamecocks.

LOUISIANA OUTDOORS

Reporting deer harvest critically important

I still recall the days a few decades ago when finding a deer track around Goldonna was virtually unheard of. There were so few deer that not only was there no season to hunt them, the rare sighting of a deer track was community news. Folks turned out to go have a look at such a rare find.

What a difference a few decades make. With the implementation 40 years or so ago of trapping and transfer of deer to areas with good habitat but no deer, the population of deer has taken off, perhaps exceeding expectations. Today I seldom make the five mile drive from my home to town late afternoon without seeing a deer.

On the area where I hunt on our Jackson Parish club, I placed a trail camera out near one of my stands a week ago with the camera aimed at a pile of corn and rice bran I placed there. Last Saturday, one week later, I checked my camera and found 179 images of deer, deer and more deer that came out to nibble on the

Therefore, it was rather disturbing to me when I read recently that the Department of Wildlife and Fisheries (LDWF) was considering reducing the length of deer season along with reducing the season bag limit. The reason for this possible action was disturbing; indication was that the deer population may be declining However, the real reason is not enough successful deer hunters were taking the time to report their deer harvest to the department, indicating that with a smaller harvest report, the assumption is that perhaps the deer herd has diminished. I contacted Scott Durham, Deer Study Leader for the LDWF for clarification of this disturbing situa-

"I want to look at the deer harvest reported to us from around the state and I'm concerned that our numbers reported are not reflecting the true picture of our harvest, Durham said.

This is why the reporting system was started to help us collect data and we depend heavily on deer hunters to report accurately on the deer they kill. If we have real declines in any area of the state, we would consider any measure to make sure we protect our resource and have plenty of deer for everybody to hunt. I every parish, we know the harvest count by year, bucks and does. It is absolutely critical that we have accurate numbers. If hunters are not reporting their deer taken, it gives us a false picture and makes it problematic for us to create harvest recommendations that are accurare," Durham added. There are no plans, at least in the near future, to reduce season length or bag limits, especially in your part of the country, in Areas 1 and 2. We're not too concerned about those areas but we do have reason for concern in areas of south Louisiana, especially Areas 4 and Louisiana has a reporting system in place that is easy to utilize, especially as compared to other states, according to Durham.

'Hunters who take a deer can go on-line or make a call to report their harvest. We have people standing by to receive these reports. You have seven days to report your harvest while in some states, you have to report within 24 hours. It's very simple; you bag a deer, just tag it and then report it as soon as possible but you have a week to turn your information in," said Durham. Here in north Louisiana, we have deer running out our ears but if hunters are not reporting what they take, we face the possibility sometime in the future of seeing season length and season limits reduced. It all depends on hunters doing that simple little task of tagging and then reporting their deer.

Let's all do a better job of reporting, okay?

Randy Quaid, wife held in Vermont on fugitive charges

ST. ALBANS, Vt. - Actor Randy Quaid and his wife were ordered held on $500,000 bail each in Vermont on Monday on charges that they skipped out of the country five years ago after being charged with vandalism in California.

The Quaids were detained at the Canadian border Friday night while trying to reenter the United States after Canadian officials granted Evi Quaid citizenship but denied Randy Quaid permanent residence and said he would be deported.

They're wanted in Santa Barbara, California, to face felony charges filed in 2010 after they were found squatting in a guesthouse of a home they previously owned.

Court papers said the damaged destroyed furniture, a fireplace and a mirror in the guesthouse. They're charged with occupying the property illegally and failure to appear for court dates. Evi Quaid also is charged with impeding Santa Barbara sheriff's

The Quaids had separate court appearances Monday — she in Burlington, near the state women's prison where she is being held, and he 28 miles north in St. Albans, near the men's prison where he is locked up.

In St. Albans, the "Independence Day" actor argued unsuccessfully for lower bail, saying his legal woes were the fault of a bail bondsman who failed to notify him of a scheduled court appearance.

"We heard about it through the Internet that we had missed this court appearance that we didn't know anything about," Quaid told Judge Alison Arms of the criminal division of the Franklin Superior Court.

The judge repeatedly said that $500,000 was unusually high bail for property crimes, but added she was not persuaded to lower it. She interrupted Quaid's statement and asked his lawyer, Peter Langrock, "Do you have any support for this?"

Langrock said he had a document from a California state agency that regulates bail bondsmen, but the judge was not satisfied.

"The court has nothing that validates anything that he (Quaid) is saying," Arms said. "What the court has right now is a $500,000 warrant from a judge in Califor-

Franklin County State's Attorney Jim Hughes asked for a three-day continuance of the case, saying that because California's courts were closed for the Columbus Day holiday, he had been unable to obtain some needed paperwork. He asked that in the meantime, the Vermont court defer to the bail set in California.

Langrock said it's likely the charges in California will be dropped, and that he believes the case has been blown out of proportion.

"If we're talking about $500,000 bail for breaking a mirror, that's an unusual situation. And I don't believe it would be happening if it weren't for the fact that he is a, quote, celebrity," he said.

The Quaids also were charged in 2009 with defrauding an innkeeper of more than $10,000 after an invalid credit card was used at San Ysidro Ranch in Montecito, California.

Felony charges were later dropped against Randy Quaid. His wife pleaded no contest and was sentenced to three years' probation.

Randy Quaid won a Golden Globe Award and was nominated for an Emmy for his portrayal of President Lyndon Johnson in "LBJ: The Early Years," but he's perhaps best known for his roles in the "National Lampoon's Vacation" movies, 'Independence Day" and "Kingpin."

He is the older brother of fellow actor Dennis Quaid.
